Abstract

The honor of convening of the First Ecumenical Council from Nicaea in 325 belongs to the Emperor Constantine the Great, like we can find out from the letters sanded to the bishops from the entire Roman Empire. The opening meeting had a great and solemn character, because was held in the presence of the Emperor himself. His word was also very impressing for the entire assistance. On the other hand, a very important was also the combating of the Arianism and the definition of the Symbol of Faith. Therefore, in this combat, our Savior Jesus Christ was placed in His doctrinal state, beside the Father and the Holy Spirit in the Holy Trinity.

The doctrine of the First Ecumenical Council maintained over the time the unity of the orthodox faith, beyond all the heretical sliding.
