Abstract

The act of doing theology in the consecrated schools has a visible spiritual crisis. Due to historical roots or to actual university system – based on a continually effort towards a large quantity of „scientific” writings – the theological school system should be put under a clear process of redefine about its proper identity and purpose. For this attempt, the writings of Father Sofronie are the most valuable benchmark. Firstly, Father Sofronie observes that theological schools are full of compilation, excessive documentation but weak in personal dogmatic and ascetic experience. Therefore, we need search the roots of the authentic mode of doing theology. Among or setting out of this mode there is the finding of the real states of the spirit of the person, when The Realities of theology are researched. This is a gradual process throughout the reaching of the ontological freedom. The statements of the spirit of the personhood are requested also for and from the authentic and rich-spiritual ecclesiastical realities, reserved for more inter-personal and not institutional relations.
